Storm Anniversaries Remind Virginians To Prepare

Richmond, Va. -- When tropical depressions Gaston and Jeanne moved into Virginia in August and September last year, no one could have predicted the extent of the havoc they were about to wreak. Together, the storms caused 22 localities to be declared federal disaster areas, nearly $50 million in damage and nine deaths. Many citizens and businesses continue to recover.

As the one-year anniversary of Gaston approaches, the southeastern United States is in the midst of an especially active season for hurricanes and tropical storms. There have already been a record nine tropical storms named during June and July alone.

"Gaston and Jeanne showed everyone that a storm doesn't have to be a hurricane to be a devastating force," said Michael Cline, state coordinator for the Virginia Department of Emergency Management.

There are a few simple, low-cost steps Virginians can take to ensure their family's safety during hurricane season. Sit down with your family and make an emergency plan. In your home, have at least a three-day supply of food and three gallons of water per person, a battery-powered radio, a flashlight, extra batteries and a first aid kit.

September is National Preparedness Month, a nationwide effort to encourage Americans to prepare for emergencies in their homes, businesses and schools. The month is a good opportunity for families and businesses to focus on disaster preparedness.

Citizens can find information about making plans and getting supplies on VDEM's Web site, www.vaemergency.com.
